

alone with God...

Psalm 88:13

In the morning my prayer comes before you.

I believe the best time to get alone with God is early morning - it sets the tone for your entire day. He'll show you things and tell you things that will make the difference at crisis points during the next twelve hours or so. After you talk with the Lord and walk with Him through the schedule that lies ahead of you, He'll strengthen and encourage you to make every point of your day an act of worship. Another advantage to a morning time with God is that He'll plant His word in your heart. You'll be amazed at how often the very verse you studied over your morning coffee will have key significance a few hours later. Ask the Spirit to illuminate your study, and then go over the Scripture passage reflectively. Try to take that verse with you the rest of the day, so that it's never far from your mind. The Word of God is essential to the worship of God, and there's simply nothing so encouraging as His timeless and powerful Word. One little verse is enough to give you a divine perspective throughout the day.
